

The Marie Curie Alumni Association Austrian Chapter (MCA<sup>3</sup>C) brings you:

PRESENTING WITH IMPACT by John Waterman

This dynamic, highly interactive and practical one-day workshop was created for scientists who want to develop their presentation and speaking skills and take them to a new level. The workshop is participant driven and delegates are encouraged to share their experience, knowledge and skills.

A key part of the workshop will be spent developing, delivering and evaluating short sections of a presentation. These could be part of a lecture or a public speech that participants have given or will give in the future. Alternatively, delegates are welcome to bring material on a subject of their choice.

The workshop is designed to both sharpen core presentation skills and integrate these into the work of a lecturer whether it is presenting to home or international students, or speaking at an international conference. The course will refresh and build on current skills, teach new ways of thinking with a more international approach and build self-confidence when presenting.

About the trainer

John Waterman was born in Hawaii, grew up in America and the UK. He lived and worked for 13 years in Spain as a teacher, trainer and School Director before opening his own school.

On returning to London, he became a Lecturer at Thames Valley University specialising in Teacher Education and Intercultural Communication. He wrote and delivered training programmes around the world with teachers from Asia, Africa, Europe and the Americas. He also designed and delivered intercultural communication courses for the Council of Europe and wrote two books on the subject.

Later John moved into the world of publishing where he drove business plans, managed budgets & led internal and external teams. The job involved extensive travelling working with teams of authors and editors from other cultures in Latin America, Europe & South East Asia.

After 10 years in publishing, he moved into Management Training to be closer to his training roots. He focuses primarily on university lecturing skills, international communication skills, intercultural communication, course design and delivery. He works with universities such as TU Vienna, Bundeswehr University, Munich, Regents University, London and Kings College, London, and Training Centres like the DiZ, Bavaria and the Berliner Zentrum für Hochschullehre, Berlin. John also works with international law firms, engineering companies and banks across Europe.
